Paddy McCoy, an elderly Irish farmer, received a letter from the Department for Work & Pensions, stating that they suspected he was not paying his employees the statutory minimum wage and they would send an inspector to interview them.

On the appointed day, the inspector turned up. "Tell me about your staff," he asked Paddy.

"Well," said Paddy, "there's the farm hand, I pay him $240 a week, and he has a free cottage. Then there's the housekeeper. She gets $190 a week, along with free board and lodging.

There's also the half-wit. He works a 16 hour day, does 90% of the work, earns about $25 a week along with a bottle of whiskey and, as a special treat, occasionally gets to sleep with my wife."

"That's disgraceful" said the inspector, "I need to interview the half-wit."

"That'll be me then," said Paddy.

A married couple went to hospital to have their baby delivered. Upon arrival, the doctor said that he had invented a machine that would transfer part of the mother's labour pain to the father and asked if they would be willing to try it. They both agreed. The doctor set the machine to transfer 10% of the pain for starters, explaining that even 10% was probably more pain than the husband had ever experienced. As the labour progressed, the husband felt fine and asked the doctor to bump it up a bit. At 20% the husband was still feeling fine and couldn't understand what all the fuss was about. The doctor was amazed at the husband's strength and checked his blood pressure and heart rate and then adjusted the machine to 50%. The husband still felt fine and as the pain transfer was helping his wife, he asked the doctor to transfer all the pain to him. The baby arrived with virtually no pain to the wife. The husband and wife were ecstatic. When they got home, the milkman was dead on the porch.

Groups of Americans were travelling by tour bus through Holland. As they stopped at a cheese farm, a young guide led them through the process of cheese making, explaining that goat's milk was used. She showed the group a lovely hillside where many goats were grazing. "These," she explained, "are the older goats put out to pasture when they no longer produce." She then asked, "What do you do in America with your old goats?"

A spry old gentleman answered, "They send us on bus tours!"
